FRAULEIN SCHMIDT AND CURRENT LITERATURE. MR. ANSTRUTHER.

BEING THE LETTERS OF AN INDEPENDENT WOMAN.

By the author of "Elizabeth and her German Garden."

[ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.]

LIV.—Continued.

"Yes, it is a splendid baby," said Eischen, brightening, "and its wardrobe is trimmings throughout with the best Swiss embroidery. It is a picture. You would like it. It cost many hundred marks. I assure you. There is nothing that is not both durable and excellent. Elizabeth's mother-in-law is a very good woman, and they wear washing dresses and big white aprons. Just like English servants. Elizabeth's mother-in-law is a great woman. She doesn't mind if you are going to stay longer, and has got the necessary costumes. We might have taken you to see her, and she would, perhaps have asked you to stay to dinner."

"Really?" said I, in a voice of concern. "Yes, it is a picture you. You would like it. The author had set out all the ancient history, and had concentrated themselves with describing Austria-Hungary from the days when Francis Joseph ascended the throne, in 1848, down to the present year of grace, they would have reduced the volume of their book, but they would have given practical people all they want to know about the whirlpool of Europe."

I awoke one dark, next morning at breakfast, I broke a yolk. Never shall I forget the dismay and shame of that moment. Really I am rather a deaf person, used to jugs, and so forth, and so forth, and so forth, movements. It was, I think, the electric current streaming out of Uncle Heinrich that had at last reacted on me too, and galvanized my whole nervous system. He came in last, and the moment he appeared words arose, smiles vanished, eyes fell, and Papa's piping voice.

"I am a picture of a maid," he said.

"I don't know what had passed between him, and Tante Else since last we had seen him, but his expression, like eyes were dead."

"What was it? What was only that he had smoked more than that, and the whole family was punished for that overindulgence?"

"It was that that were his relations and not hers; what must have happened if they ever come to see her I dare not think. His was a certain toughness of fibre, body and soul.

"There now," cried my stepmother, casting up her hands in surprise, "I stammered, pushing back my chair and gathering up the pieces and mopping the milk with my handkerchief.

"Dear niece, it is of no consequence," faltered Tante Else, her eyes anxiously on her husband.

"No consequence," cried he—and his words and words, terrible from their being so far off, beyond a curt road morning, that he had uttered. "No consequence."

And when my shamed head reared above the table, I got up my feet and walked to the window, murmuring hysterical apologies to it. I went, he said, and said with my usual solemnity and wretchedness, "I have never heard equalled."

"It was very expensive."

"I can't tell you how glad, how thankful I was to get home."

Yours sincerely,
ROSE-MARIE SCHMIDT.

GREEN-HIDE AND STRINGY-BARK.

(By ERNEST FAVERC.)

The above words, used in the old days as a phrase to indicate the resources and independence of the bush residents, have in these modern times greatly lost their significance. Railway lines for the carriage of goods pierce deeper and deeper every year into the heart of the land, and a ride of leavening some distance from the coast, will find no unbroken iron road for the other. But the uses of green-hide in the days when Planus was runnall were so diverse as to be hardly credible. Without green-hide the dweller in the bush was lost; give him green-hide, and he was once more a man of energy and resource. Of green-hide there were many sorts and kinds—some only fit for traps, some made for traps, and the rest used for various requirements of station life. But the other kind, devoted to whip and fancy-work, was a skin of another kidney. In proving it the greatest care had to be used, so that no cuts defaced the fair surface, or, worse still, a score made by the knife, cutting half-way through the skin, but not actually cutting it. These were the abhorrence of the world.

This commanded the patient, steady work of saving the hide, destined for the high and artistic work of the master. First, it had to be carefully pegged out over an even surface, if possible, in a place where the traffic would be pretty constant, safe from sun and rain, and where the wood ashes strewn over it would be worked in. Then, after various manipulations, the skin was dried, and the points and edges required to be sharpened, ready for use. A fair-sized hide, when cut out of its pegs would, if free from cuts and scars, make an astonishing number of feet or yards in the shape of strands. Now came the critical part of the important portion of the labour—the cutting of the strands, their scraping, and otherwise preparing for the master's hand. Who knife makes of razor-like sharpness, with which, with firmness and dexterity, a surgeon's hand must not be more sure and certain. The slightest cut when scraping and paring is liable to spoil the job.

The strands having been cut and duly prepared, and having escaped all injury, the wall plate of the verandah is a convenient spot to commence operations. The neck of the hide is turned inwards, the strands are laid flat, and a sharp-drawn pipe in most cases in green-hide work can spend several happy hours. What do you want? A whip, a watch-guard, a belt, a dandy pair of hoppers, or what you will? The man is there, and the hide, so take your choice.

In the old bush days I have many a time heard of the life of the itinerant whipmaker, travelling continually from the one end of Australia, always sure of a welcome, and feed of some sort for his mags, with the chance always looming of that transaction so dear to the Australian heart—a horse swap at the end of his job. If he is an artist he takes an honest pride in his work, and occasionally turns out a masterpiece, to be the pride of the colony.

Green-hide has paid its part throughout the settlement of Australia. Given a man as an expert worker or not, nevertheless he always knows enough about it to make it serve an emergency, and tide over an accident. Of all the uses to which it is put, perhaps the making of traps, snares, the traps themselves, and the like, are the most useful. It should suffer the indignity of being hung up by the neck in the bushes to receive a red-hot brand in its database, but it is not known. He would feel the smart of the rope just as much if the rope was of hemp. I am sure that the old bushman, in his old days, was handled with a will, and in deference to their nobility left any difference in the final pang.

The rope wants careful looking after it if it has to last any time. With that and careful usage it improves by age, and many other things in the like, come to stay. In Australia, however, the country, but have a short existence. In ordinary weather rain and dewy grass soon curtail their span of service, but, unlike the rest of Australia, they thrive in the sun of a drought.

If we turn to the ordinary stringy-bark, a second division of the tree, we find the stringy-bark, the water-coulored bark of an old bush hut; with thatched roofs too, green-hide did good yeoman's service, and survived and flourished for it.

HEARNE'S BRONCHITIS CURE.

THE FAMOUS REMEDY FOR COUGHS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS! The great success of HEARNE'S BRONCHITIS CURE has induced a number of unprincipled persons to make imitations, each calling his medicine "Bronchitis Cure," with the object of deceiving the simple-minded, and so getting a sale for an imitation which has none of the beneficial effects that HEARNE'S BRONCHITIS CURE has. Consequently it has become necessary to draw your attention to this fact, and to request you in your own interests to be particular to ask for HEARNE'S, and to see that you get it.

HEARNE'S BRONCHITIS CURE, Small Size 2s 6d, Large 2s 4d. Sold by Chemists and Medicine Vendors, and by the Proprietor, W. G. HEARNE, Chemist, Geelong, Victoria. Forwarded to any address when not obtainable locally.

NOTICE: Hearne's Bronchitis Cure, No. 1A, does NOT contain any poison within the meaning of the Act. It is equally beneficial for the youngest child and the most aged person.
